batting practice for the World double-header defeat of the series against the Cubs Monday, son, but the Chicago White Sox collected 26 hits in running off had to settle for a split against the opener, 23-10. Bob Trowbridge blanked the Cubs with three hits in winning the nightcap, 4-0.

Redlegs Nip Cards

The Redlegs nipped the Cardinals, 3-1, on Frank Robinson's two-run homer in the 10th inning of the nightcap after home runs by Bob Thurman, George Crowe and Ed Bailey carried Cincinnati to a 10-5 opening game victory.

By TIM MORIARTY United Press Sports Writer

It will take more than a "miracle finish" like the New York Giants produced in 1951 to catch the Milwaukee Braves now in the National League pennant race.

Six years ago, the Giants electrified the baseball world when, after trailing the Brooklyn Dodgers by six games at the Labor Day milestone, they won 17 of their last 21 games to finish in a first place tie with the Dodgers and then walked off with the flag on Bobby Thomson's dramatic ninth inning home run in the third game of the playoffs.

Now consider the almost hopeless task confronting Milwaukee's nearest rivals at this same stage of the campaign this season: Hank Sauer hit two homers and drove in six runs as the New York Giants walloped the Pittsburgh Pirates, 11-5. The Giants also won the nightcap, 4-3, on southpaw Johnny Antonelli's two-run homer in his first shutout of the season in the sixth inning.

The Baltimore Orioles dealt the New York Yankees their first while the Braves swepting their holiday doubleheader against the Chicago Cubs Monday, the second-place St. Louis Cardinals dropped two games to the Cincinnati Redlegs and the third-place Dodgers lost twice to Philadelphia. That left the Cardinals 9½ games behind and the Dodgers nine games out.

Even if the Braves win only 12 of their remaining 24 games, the Cardinals must win 25 of 23 to rob them of the championship while the Dodgers must win 21 of 22 to retain the flag.

The Braves got in some good

Both Yanks And Sox In Need Of Help

By GENE BLUDEAU United Press Sports Writer

CHICAGO — The league-leading New York Yankees and the frantic Chicago White Sox started a bidding contest today for aging pitchers Sal Maglie of Brooklyn and Virgil Trucks of Kansas City as both clubs hoisted into the pennant stretch drive.

The Yankees, recovering from recent jitters after a late season slump, and the White Sox, without reaching distance of the flag, are both in need of mound help. Maglie is 6-6 and Trucks, 8-5, thus far.

Charles Comiskey, youthful vice president of the Chicago club, brought the bargaining contest out of the realm of rumor when he said he was "interested" in obtaining the 40-year old Maglie.

Comiskey said he talked to Buzzy Bavasi, Brooklyn vice president, about Maglie and that the Dodger executive promised a reply by Friday. Comiskey didn't say how much he was prepared to pay, but it was learned authoritatively that Bavasi, after obtaining waivers on Maglie, was asking $75,000.

Comiskey, in a now-or-never mood to overtake the perennial American League champions, said that he was aware the Yanks are also after Maglie and perhaps Trucks.

"I'm prepared to go as high or higher than they will," he said.

Comiskey said he also had made a "substantial offer" for Trucks after the 36-year old fireballer was cleared on waivers.

"We could use either Maglie or Trucks, or both," he said. Yankee maneuverings in the bargaining were silent thus far but were believed to be equally or possibly more effective.

Star Credits Yoga For Trim Figure

By VERNON SCOTT United Press Staff Correspondent

HOLLYWOOD — Olivia de-Havilland, back in cinema city for the first time in two years, credits yoga for keeping her slim, trim and beautiful.

The two-time Oscar winner, now living in Paris, specializes in standing on her head.

"That's why I feel so wonderful," she said.

"I know nothing about yoga philosophy, but the exercises keep me in shape. I practice them every day at home — starting with the lotus position and working up to standing on my head."

The actress, usually a shy individual, startled nearby diners in the Brown Derby with a series of undulating breathing drills.

Pressing her hands on her mid-section, Olivia said, "now watch. You start here and breathe upward through the chest and shoulders."

The demonstration looked for all the world like a woman having trouble with a tight corset.

"It's all based on breathing, circulation and relaxation of muscles and joints," she smiled.

"No portion of the body goes unexercised."

Twice a week I spend 45 minutes with Madame Vasa. She is my yoga instructor, the brown-eyed actress said. "I asked her to recommend a yoga for me over here, but she didn't know any in Hollywood."

"I've lived in Paris for the past four years. In that time I made three pictures and one baby (Gisele, age 13 months). I doubt if I will ever come back to live in Hollywood. You might say I'm giving it up for a man — my husband."

YOU CAN DIE LAUGHING

By A.A. FAIR (ERLE STANLEY GARDNER)

CHAPTER 33

THERE was a little restaurant that was open and some French fried potatoes. Frank Sellers drank three cups of coffee and did little talking. Wanda Warren did little talking but tried to turn her charm on Sellers.

We drove back to the section of land.

Sellers stopped the police cruiser, switched off the headlights and the motor. The San Bernardino deputy's spotlight was a firefly in the darkness. Then he came forward.

"Everything under control?" he asked.

"Everything under control, Jerry," Sellers said. "Take this car, go to Yucca and get something to eat, and you'd better drink a lot of coffee. You can guide the others when they get there."

"Okay," Jerry said. "This damned flashlight is running down."

"I picked up some more batteries and another flashlight in Yucca," Sellers told him.

Jerry took the car and drove off into the darkness.

I found a trunk of dead Joshua palms, some dried sagebrush, a few roots and made a campfire. It was a weird setting, the flames of the fire casting flickering shadows, showing Frank Sellers grim-faced, thoughtful, alert. Wanda Warren, plainly apprehensive.

She changed her position from time to time, stretching out on her side on the sand, her chin on her palm, letting the flashlight show her curves to advantage.

Sellers never even looked at her. She might as well have been a wooden figure.

Once or twice she looked at me, but she smiled at me pathetically and let it go. Much of the time I was out in the desert dragging in more firewood.

The stars blazed steadily overhead. The fire crackled a ruddy circle of warmth that stretched out only a few feet. The cold chill of the desert night kept creeping in closer and closer.

After a while we saw headlights in the desert. Four cars came along the road, the beams of the headlights dancing up and down as the wheels went over the hills and dips in the dirt road. The procession of cars turned in at the property. Jerry leading them in Frank Sellers' car.

Men went about the work in hand with well-trained coordination. A floodlight was rigged up, a tripod erected over the way, a block and tackle fastened to it and then a canvas sling was fastened to it and got more fire-

A news car came jolting along. A photographer got out and started dazzling everyone with blinding flashbulbs. The correspondent I had met at Banning came over and shook hands. Men went down the shaft. We could hear voices and shouted orders. At length, a signal was given and men started pulling on the line which ran through the block at the peak of the tripod. After a while the canvas sling came up. The corner bent over it. Then someone produced a blanket.

I looked at my watch. It was midnight.

The whole operation had gone so smoothly that one didn't realize how many details there had been and how much time had necessarily been consumed.

I saw a glow of light out on the desert, then caught a glimpse of headlights that came and went as a car alternately dipped down into the hollows, then climbed back to high ground. It was coming fast.

Sellers said, "Okay, please, we're done here."

"Not for a minute," I told him. "Stick around. I want a witness."

"To what?" he asked.

"To what's going to happen."

I told him.

The car made a skidding turn into the property, throwing up a cloud of sand. It was braked to a stop. The lights went out, to a stop. Corning's big figure and I saw Corning's head behind the steering wheel.

"What the hell's the idea, Lam?" he asked indignantly.

I said, "I've located Mrs. Wells. That's all."

He looked past me to the little group of men that were coiling ropes, taking down the tripod, and then his eyes lit on Wanda Warren.

He took long strides, reaching her side.

"Well, hello, my dear! How are you?" he said. "I feel like I saw your picture in the paper, you know."

Wanda felt such a relief at finding someone who was willing to fall for her personality that she turned it on with a rush.

"Oh, did you indeed?" she said, smiling up at him and blinking her eyes.

"You're making a mistake, Corning," I said.

"What the devil do you mean?" he asked over his shoulder.

I said, "That's got Mrs. Wells. That's Wanda Warren."

He looked around and said, "She's the only woman here."

I pointed to the place where the blanket covered the canvas sling. "No, she isn't," I said, smiling. "No, she isn't."

"Here's Yvonne Wells," I said, pointing to the woman known as Yvonne Wells.

I went over and jerked back

Making Harps Is Job For The Hands

By ALFRED LEECH
United Press Staff Correspondent
CHICAGO 40 — In an era of mass production, the world's only harp factory stands as a reminder of a less hectic age.

"You just can't mass produce harps," said burly Frank Hanzlik, superintendent of the Lyon & Healy Harp Plant, "it takes skilled craftsmanship."

So in its 68 years of operation, the factory has turned out only about 5,300 harps. This year the firm expects to produce 65, an all-time high.

"A few years ago we were making about 60 a year," Hanzlik said.

"But there's been a boom in all musical instruments and harps are no exception. Our output is up about 40 per cent."

Which translates into an increase of 15 per year, a goodly number considering it takes three to four months to build a harp.

Tedious Work

It's tedious work, Hanzlik said, because both the wooden and metal parts, more than 2,000 of them, must be built to micro-tolerances. The spruce sounding-board, for example, must taper from a thickness of 72-thousandths of an inch to an incredible 360-thousandths.

"Not exactly a job for the do-it-yourself fan," Hanzlik opined.

It takes three weeks just to put the gold leaf on the hand-carved harp column. The artisan who performs this task rubs a beaver brush across his cheek to induce static electricity, then picks up the delicate 24-karat gold leaf on the brush tip by magnification.

The raw materials for building a harp come from three continents and include eight different woods, some of which must be seasoned a year under strict temperature and humidity control.

The curved neck of the instrument is built of seven layers of specially seasoned maple, laminated to withstand 2,000 pounds of pull from the strings.

Built To Last

And a harp must be built to last. The first one ever turned out by the factory back in 1889 still is in daily service at Morgan Park High School here.

The harp factory, covering an entire floor of a rambling warehouse-building, employs 25 men. Despite the affinity of Irishmen and harps, there's not a single

MOCKING THE ATOM

AN ACTUAL SIZE mock-up of the atomic reactor for the first full-scale nuclear power plant in the United States for the generation of electricity now is being used for engineering development work at the Atomic Energy commission's Bettis plant, operated by Westinghouse Electric corporation. Standing 45 feet high and approximately 10 feet in overall diameter, the mock-up was built of wood, plastic and metal. Main purpose of the model is to determine shape and configurations of pipes, cables and component parts to be installed in the actual reactor at Shippingport, Pa. The site of the atomic power station now under construction. The mock-up eventually will be moved to the Shippingport site for additional studies and display purposes.

Full-scale, 45-foot mock-up of the pressurized water reactor.

Inside these tubes, or shrouds, will move control rods of hafnium metal, which can absorb neutrons and thus retard or speed up atom splitting. At the reactor's top are two reflecting ports.

Looking up inside the mock-up. The tubes inside the grid plate are shrouds which will guide the control rods, which regulate the atom splitting process. The box-shaped units are fuel elements.

Stay-Home Moms Praised By Welfare

CHICAGO — The woman who stays at home to make her family the center of her life is the "back bone" of the nation. The president of the American Committee on Maternal Welfare says.

Dr. Frederick H. Falls, speaking at a meeting of his committee, said the woman who has returned to work immediately after having a child may be depriving herself of one of "life's greatest satisfactions."

Falls said a woman is "not truly fulfilled" until she has had a child or unless she can substitute a creative activity that to her is just as important.

He said the stay-at-home mothers and those with satisfactory creative substitutes produce people with the ability "to carry this country forward."

October 27, 1957, is the official start of the 12-month Theodore Roosevelt Centennial honoring the rose-loving 26th President of the United States.

MIAMI — The distaff side is making up for its slow start in the banking business.

Until World War II women didn't have much of a place in the banking world. But Department of Commerce figures now show that 48 per cent of the show that 48 per cent of the nation's banks are women.

A pioneer in the trend to women bankers is the Industrial National Bank of Miami. Eighty per cent of the staff is female.

In fact two women are vice presidents—some sort of a record in the banking business.

The top-flight women bankers are Mrs. Marie Whaler, in charge of advertising and public relations, and Mrs. Mary Mitchell, operations officer and cashier.

Both are veterans in the organization. Mrs. Mitchell started in 1939 as a teller and worked her way up through a book-keeping department. Mrs. Whaler started as a credit investigator in 1935, and spent many years in key spots in the bank's consumer credit department.

The bank president, Leonard Abess, doesn't think it strange to have two women in such top-flight jobs.

"And why not?" he asked, "after all, more than 75 per cent of the national wealth is supposed to be controlled by women."

Coronary Less Frequent In Certain Ones

NEW YORK, N. Y. — Coronary heart disease, the commonest form of heart disease today, is least frequent among young married women, among those living in the rural part of the southern states, and among those who have had no history of premature death or occurrence of heart disease in the family.

A study of recorded mortality from heart disease by statisticians reveals variations according to age, sex, weight, race, marital status, geographic region, and other factors.

Up to age 45, the death rate from heart disease runs up to 6.6 times as high for white men as for white women. The rate decreases progressively with advancing age, until at ages 85 and over, the rates for the two sexes among white persons are about the same. Among non-whites, the sex differences in the death rate are much smaller, and do not vary much with age.

Heart disease death rates are significantly higher for the widowed, the single, and the divorced than for the married. It would appear, therefore, that the factors which point out that the factors selected with married life and the more favorable environment of the married — influence the level of mortality from the disease.

A number of studies have shown that people who are overweight are more likely to suffer fatal attacks of heart disease. When overweight is coupled with slight or moderate elevation of blood pressure, the chances of such an attack are greatly increased.

The heart disease death rate is lowest in the east south central region and highest in the middle Atlantic region.

"Statistical findings strongly suggest that hereditary factors have a considerable influence on the level of mortality from heart disease," the statisticians conclude. "A recent investigation of insured lives showed that persons who on their application for life insurance had reported two or more cases of cardiovascular disease under age 60 in their families were themselves subject to death rates from cardiovascular disease which were from one and three-fourths to two and one-half times those prevailing in standard risks."

Winners of the All-America Rose Selections are usually higher standards than usually demanded by flower show judges. More than fragrance, foliage, substance, form, color and stem — AARS prize winners are judged on such fine points as color on opening, color on finishing, bud form, form of open bloom, disease resistance, vigor, floriferousness, and novelty.

Roses Need
Plenty Of Water, Spray

During the hot summer months, and especially in peak heat of August, roses need ample water. The rose is one of the sturdiest of plants but extra summer care is needed to keep this thirsty beauty at its best. Water your roses regularly, spraying them for a steady flow of vital moisture.

It is absolutely essential that the watering be thorough — this means soaking the soil to a depth of eight to ten inches without wetting the foliage. However, wetting the foliage is permissible in the more arid areas of the South and Western part of the country.

Roses of tested hardiness, such and beautiful blooms.

Relics Recall
Story Of Chief
Tecumseh

By CHARLES F. HINDS
Secretary-Treasurer
Kentucky Historical Society

FRANKFORT — In 1919, the Kentucky Historical Society received a remarkable Indian collection. Among the items were the bullet-torn and blood-stained battle flag Tecumseh carried at the Battle of the Thames and some property of his braves — a striking iron used in starting fires and a pair of flannel home-spun leggings.

Tecumseh, or Tecumthe, was born in 1769 in Old Piqua on the Mad River in Ohio. His father, a Shawnee, and his mother, a Creek, had recently migrated with their tribe from Alabama on the invitation of the fierce Wyandottes.

Puckeshinwa, father of Tecumseh, was killed in the battle of Point Pleasant in 1774 or soon thereafter. Methoatske, the mother of the then six-year old Tecumseh, made the impressionable boy swear that he would devote his life to taking revenge on the "Long Knives" who killed Puckeshinwa.

After his father's death, Tecumseh was adopted by the Shawnee chief, Blackfish. Blackfish had lost a son at the hands of Daniel Boone on a raid into Kentucky. The old Shawnee adopted sons, white and Indian, to fill the void left by this loss. Three of Tecumseh's foster brothers were Richard Sparks, Benjamin Kelley and Stephen Ruddle — all Kentucky boys.

The strangest foster brother of them all was Daniel Boone, captured with 30 others at Blue Licks in 1778. Blackfish named Boone, with whom he was much taken, "Big Turtle" — some say because a turtle denotes wisdom, others, because of the obvious contradiction suggested by the quick-witted Boone and the slow turtle.

Tecumseh began to gather warriors around him in 1805. He was ably assisted by his youngest blood brother, Laulewasika, better known as the Prophet, who had been converted by Shaker missionaries of Kentucky and Indiana from a hafer and an alcoholic into one of the most outstanding Indian evangelists of all times.

Tecumseh organized the Indian tribes into a large confederation, but Gen. William Henry Harrison lured the red warriors into a premature attack at Tippecanoe in 1811 while Tecumseh was in the South recruiting more tribes.
